GRANT AWARD ANNOUNCEMENTS

CONGRATULATIONS

ESL Department

for receiving $109,690.17 for the

Refugee School Impact Grant

Sponsor: The Educational Service Center of Central Ohio

Did You Know? Be specific about 1:1 aide duties in the IEP Clearly identify that the service is individual to that student—Clarify that the student will have an individual assisting him, either by checking the appropriate box or writing it into the comment or notes section. This signals that an individual one-to-one aide will be dedicated that student.

Define what the one-to-one aide is there to do—Specifically, what is this person doing? What is her role in this? Will the one-to-one aide offer academic support? Behavioral support? “To the extent they are there to implement a particular component of the IEP, that should be defined.

Use clearer terminology for one to one aide—The more you can define what they’re doing, the better. Rather than saying “one-to-one aide,” say, for example “specialized physical health care services” further defining the relationship of this related service to the student’s heal and clearly relaying what the person would be doing.

Do's and Don'ts

Do teach parents about copyright piracy - Avengers: Endgame might be a smash hit, but don't include images of the Hulk, Captain America and Thor in the school publicity and flyers for a school event. Copyright infringement is considered theft. The ESSA Pub. L. No. 114-95, takes a hard line on it, asking schools to educate parents about the "harms of copyright piracy." ESSA suggests a lesson about copyright piracy could take place during literacy and technology training as part of building parent capacity to increase student achievement.

Don't limit use of Title III sub grants for immigrant children and youth - The U.S. Education Department strongly recommends that LEAs receiving Title III immigrant sub grants give priority to activities that will meet the unique needs of the immigrant children and youths enrolled in the LEA, as well as parents and families of these students.
