Dos and Don'ts - English Learners

Don't dumb down materials for ELs. Use grade-level instructional materials for English learners to develop their academic English language proficiency and content knowledge. For ELs in K-12 schools, provide visual and verbal supports to make core content comprehensible. Avoid "deadly dull materials".

Do support early childhood education with Title III funds. New language in ESSA makes Title III support for preschool children. Title III funds may be used for early childhood educators' professional development, or for building their capacity for creating effective language instruction educational programs and preparing students to enter all-English settings.

Don't deny immigrant ELs their legal rights. All children in the U.S. are entitled to a basic public elementary and secondary education under civil rights laws. Local educational agencies must ensure that ELs have comparable access to the standard curriculum within a reasonable period and the same services as peers. The U.S. Education Department also expects schools to help parents understand their children's rights, including rights to EL services.

Do develop cultural sensitivity towards ELs' families. Help English learners' achievement by engaging their families in their children's school and learning. To engage families, communicate with sensitivity, awareness, and some knowledge of their culture. When parents are involved, students feel welcome and are more engaged.
