

Teen Reproductive Life Plan

The Reproductive Life Plan (RLP) gives teens the opportunity to think about their goals and consider how having children (or not) fits in with those goals. While life plans tend to evolve with experiences, the RLP encourages teens to plan their lives so they have the ability to move from chance to choice when it comes to having a child.

How to Use the Teen RLP:

The plan can be completed by teens independently, one-on-one with a counselor, trusted adult or family member or in classrooms and group settings. It is important teens feel their environment is safe and nonjudgmental and that their responses will remain confidential. There are no right or wrong answers and the guide can be changed any time as life plans change. And because life goals differ from person to person, anyone administering or discussing the Teen RLP should withhold their own assumptions and recognize teens are not required to respond in a certain way or at all to any of the questions. The intent is for teens to be open to sharing their personal thoughts, and for trusted adults to listen and understand them before responding.
